

The Big Easy

What do you think about when someone mentions the city of New Orleans aka, the Big Easy? Super Bowl in the Super Dome? Mardi Gras? The Mississippi River? Riverboats? The French Quarter? Come along with me on our first Legends Travelogue as we take...

A Legends Walking Tour of New Orleans

- The French Quarter is an area along the Mississippi River which still looks like it did 200-300 years ago. The residents are not allowed to change the external structures. They are only allowed to keep them up and improve them. Therefore, they look pretty much like they did hundreds of years ago. The buildings now house restaurants, residences, bars, music venues, souvenir shops, art shops, antique stores, hotels: probably the same as it did back when the Louisiana Purchase was signed here. Many structures look like this (the building, I mean). By the way, to the locals those are not balconies. If there are supporting beams, they're galleries. Without the supports are they are considered balconies.
